On Feb. 27, Evan gave an emotional testimony on Capitol Hill to help get Sexual Assault Survivors Bill of Rights Acts passed in all 50 states.

After Sexual Assault Testimony: EVAN WON'T BACK DOWN

The response to Evan Rachel Wood's powerful statement detailing two instances in which she was raped and one in which she was tortured has largely been that of support, but fans were left with one big question: Why isn't she naming her attackers? The Westworld star, 30, isn't shying away from the question. "The laws of consent protect one of my abusers," she tweeted. "If a woman says no 50 times but goes numb and gives in because she feels there is no way out or she freezes as a trauma response, that is considered consent." She also says she's "still too damn afraid" to name her abusers because "one of them threatened to kill me too many times." Regardless of whether she ever decides to publicly reveal those who assaulted her, Evan says she's never backing down – but she is healing. "Being heard, it was the closest thing I will get to closure," she says. "And it feels good."

Selena to Justin: MAKE UP WITH MY MOM!

Selena Gomez is thrilled about her romance redux with Justin Bieber, but there's one thing that's still bothering her: Justin has yet to make amends with her mom, Mandy Teefey. "There has been so much bad blood between them," a source tells In Touch. "Selena has told Justin that it's his responsibility to make things right, no matter what it takes." In January, Mandy, 41, said she hasn't spoken to the "Love Yourself" singer, 23, in years and that she is "not happy" about Selena, 25, giving him another chance. "Selena has defended Justin, but Mandy doesn't trust him," says the source. "She doesn't think it's too much to ask that he try to make amends with her mom. She knows she won't truly be happy until the people she loves most in the world have finally made peace."

"Justin doesn't even know where to begin with Mandy," says a source.
